Catalog Course Description:
ANTH 102 Introduction to Cultural Anthropology
The emphasis of this general education course is the investigation of human culture. By learning about the diversity of cultural practices around the world, students will be able to evaluate their identities within their own societies. In addition to discovering the theories and methods important to cultural anthropology, the course will include an extensive examination of cross-cultural diversity. Students will learn about how people in different cultures obtain their food, exchange goods, organize themselves in groups, engage in politics, raise children, and worship supernatural beings. Also addressed will be the issue of how cultural anthropology can contribute to addressing problems important in the modern world. This course is designed for anthropology majors, those with an interest in anthropology, or anyone with a desire to further their understanding of human culture.

Student Learning Outcomes:

• Given a cultural practice, students will be able to apply the principle of cultural relativism and identify ethnocentrism.
• Students will understand the components of culture and the process of cultural change.
• Students will identify and understand the major theoretical perspectives in the field of cultural anthropology including holism, functionalism, historicism.
• Students will understand and identify examples of the basic types of economic, political, and religious systems found throughout the world.
• Students will understand and identify examples the different types of social organization including marriage, descent, and kinship systems.
